If your information falls into the wrong hands, it could cost you time and money to restore your good name and credit status. To help keep your financial reputation intact, follow these helpful tips.

Secure your Social Security number and don't share it with anyone.

Review your receipts and compare them with your account statements.

Filter your email and don't respond to unsolicited requests for information.

Shred items containing personal information, like credit offers, statements, and expired cards.

Beware of those around you when you're using an ATM or typing passwords.

Check your credit report once a year for accuracy.

Collect your mail promptly and remember to put it on hold while you're traveling.

Install firewalls and virus-detection software on your home computer.

Track billing cycles to make sure you receive your bills and statements; contact senders if they're late.

Create hard-to-guess passwords and change them frequently.

If you think you've been the victim of identity theft, contact your consumer financial institutions (like banks and credit unions) and the consumer reporting agencies, file a report with the Federal Trade Commission, and get in touch with your local law enforcement.
